PREFACE

This report was prepared by the Social and Economic Data Unit of Central Statistical Services in response to a perceived need for data on migration for counties and regions. It presents net migration figures by sex and five-year age group for the intercensal periods from 1951-56 to 1971-76.

Migration is an important factor in population change (size, age/sex structure and spatial distribution) and a necessary input to the preparation of population estimates and projections. Study of the interaction of spatial mobility with social and economic change is of interest to professional planners, politicians and the general public.

Of all the components of population change, internal migration has been the most difficult to measure, especially when considering the intercounty migration streams which in Ontario's situation would involve a matrix of 53 x 53 counties. We are presently working on a solution to this problem. However, an estimate of net migration for each county and region is relatively easier to calculate, by comparing population reported in census documents at the beginning and end of each period and data on natural increase over the time period. The methodology for this exercise is described in detail in the chapter preceding the statistical tabulations.

Finally, a word of caution. The data in this report are estimates and should be treated as such. They portray general trends in spatial mobility across the province, but care and judgement must be exercised when dealing with the absolute values.

METHODOLOGY OF ESTIMATION OF ONTARIO NET MIGRATION

(A) BACKGROUND

In this study, net migration, the difference between immigration and emigration, is estimated by using the survival rate method. This method, like the vital statistics method, is a residual procedure.

The basic formula for estimating net migration in an intercensal period by residual method is: $M = (PE - PI) - (B - D)$ (1)

where PI = population at the first census

PE = population at the next census

B = births during the intercensal period

D = deaths during the intercensal period

Net migration is derived as the residual of change in population (PE-PI) and natural increase (B-D) during the intercensal period.

The straightforward application of (1) by subtracting natural increase (B-D) from the intercensal population increment (PE-PI) provides an estimate of net migration by the vital statistics method for a given period of time. Theoretically, if the data on births, deaths and population size are all accurate, the net migration derived from (1) should also be accurate. Therefore, the vital statistics method is frequently used to estimate net migration for the total population of an area because the required data are generally readily available and considered reliable.

However, this method is rarely used to estimate net migration by age and sex mainly because of the difficulty of manipulating the required death statistics by age group. In view of this, the survival rate method is used in this study because of the relative ease of generating estimates of net migration by age without resorting to the data of deaths by age.

(B) METHODS OF ESTIMATION

In summary, the final estimates of Ontario's net migration by sex, single years of age and county are generated in two stages. The preliminary average estimates are first obtained by averaging the forward and reverse estimates. These preliminary estimates are then adjusted to ensure that the total adjusted estimate obtained by summing up all age and sex groups and all counties is equal to the Ontario aggregate net migration derived from the vital statistics method. The procedures for deriving the forward and reverse estimates of net migration, the average estimate and the final estimate are discussed below.

Forward Estimate

The forward estimate of net migration by age is calculated as:

$$FM = P_{i+t}^t - SP_i^o \quad (2)$$ where i = age

 t = interval in years between Censuses
 P_i^o = population aged i at the first Census
 P_{i+t}^t = population aged $i+t$ at the next Census
 S = survival rate or the proportion of people who are still alive at age $i+t$ at the next Census from those who were alive at age i at the first Census.
 SP_i^o is the expected population at the second census had there been no net migration. The difference between actual population P_{i+t}^t and SP_i^o obviously is the net migration between Censuses. That (2) is based on (1) can be seen more clearly by substituting S by $1-d$ in (2) where d is the death rate, then

$$FM = P_{i+t}^t - (1-d) P_i^o$$

$$= P_{i+t}^t - P_i^o + dP_i^o$$

Where P_{i+t}^t , P_i^o and dP_i^o correspond to PE , PI and D respectively in (1)

when calculating net migration for age groups other than those born during the intercensal period. For the new-born cohorts, just replace P_i^0 by the number of births in (2).

For a population with net immigration, it should be noted that the forward estimate tends to understate the number of implied deaths during the intercensal period because the initial population understates the average population exposed to deaths. As a result, this method overstates the number of survivors and thus underestimates net migration. The reverse is true for the population with net emigration.

Reverse Estimate

The reverse estimate of net migration is derived by:

$$RM_{i+t} = (P_{i+t}^t / S) - P_i^0 = FM_{i+t} / S \quad (3)$$

RM is obtained by subtracting the initial population from the "younged" population derived by dividing the terminal population by the survival rate. The application of this method has the opposite effect of using the forward estimate in overestimating net migration for population with net immigration, and underestimating it for population with net emigration.

Average Estimate

The average net migration is computed as:

$$AM_{i+t} = (FM_{i+t} + RM_{i+t}) / 2 \quad (4)$$

AM is considered to be a more satisfactory estimate of net migration because of a more meaningful assumption regarding the timing of net migration.¹

Final Estimate

Since the net migration computed from the vital statistics method for total population is considered accurate with accurate data on births, deaths

1 For more discussion about the survival rate method, see H. S. Shryock and J. S. Siegal, The Methods and Materials of Demography, Vol. 2, 1971, Chapters 20 and 21.

and census population, it is, therefore, desirable to adjust AM so that the sum of adjusted AM for all ages, sexes and counties (TS) is equal to total Ontario net migration computed from the vital statistics method (TV). The adjustment involves multiplying AM by an adjustment factor (TV/TS) for each intercensal period. Since TS is generally very similar to TV, the required adjustment is usually rather minor.

(C) DATA BASE

In this study, net migration by single years of age and sex is estimated for fifty-three counties and five economic regions in Ontario over five intercensal periods from 1951 to 1976. Basically, three sets of data are required and they are explained as follows:

Population by Sex and Single Years of Age and by County, Census Years

There are two problems in compiling the required population data. The first one concerns the adjustment of population because of boundary changes and the second one relates to the derivation of single year population from population by five-year age group.

It is very important to adjust population for boundary changes. Unless the population figures are adjusted to represent a constant area, the estimates obtained in the previous section reflect not only the net migration but also the population change resulting from boundary change. In this study, the population data for particular areas are adjusted to reflect the county delineation as of June 1, 1976. Conceivably, many changes in area boundaries occurred for many counties over such a long period as from 1951 to 1976. It is extremely difficult to adjust every county which experienced some boundary change at one time or another. Adjustments were made, therefore, only for those counties in which boundary changes involved a significant shift in population. Those counties included: Ottawa-Carleton, Russell, Durham, Halton, Hamilton-Wentworth, Northumberland, Peterborough, Simcoe, Toronto, Victoria, York, Essex, Kent, Oxford, Perth, Sudbury (R.M.) and Sudbury (T.D.).

In Ontario, the population data by single years of age and sex and by county are available only from the 1966 census. Sprague multipliers were used to generate population by single years of age from the available five-year population for census years 1951, 1956 and 1961.

Live Births by Sex and County (Census Year Basis)

To be compatible with data on population, the available data on births on a calendar year basis have to be adjusted to a census year basis, i.e., from June 1 to May 31. Furthermore, the data on live births were also adjusted for boundary changes. In this study, this was done for the counties indicated in the previous section.

Survival Rate by Sex and County

Survival rate is defined as the proportion of the population of a certain age which will survive a given time period. Therefore, survival rate is defined in terms of two ages and two time references. The survival rates used in deriving the net migration in this study were computed from life tables. A life table traces a cohort of newborn babies through their entire life under the assumption that they are subject to currently observed age-specific mortality rates.

Since the life tables presently available from Statistics Canada for Ontario cover only the province and not the counties, the survival rates computed from these tables by sex are applied to every county. We are aware that this procedure will distort the estimates of net migration for counties of below or above average mortality patterns, but this is unavoidable unless one attempts to prepare a separate life table for each county for each census year by sex - some 636 distinct life tables. The cost of such an undertaking would be prohibitive especially in light of the relatively small improvements which could be expected in the estimates of net migration for some areas.
